

Office Safety and Home Office Safety Online Course including ergonomics

Overview

This course aims to provide guidance and examples of how to risk assess your office and home office work and is based on Safe Work Australia and WorkSafe Victoria guidance.

For employees: In this course you can check your workstation ergonomics (home or office) and provide a report for your employer, which may include some requests for changes or additions to your current set up.

For employers: If you have employees working at computers (either at home or in the office) you can help meet your OHS legislative requirements, by getting them to complete the course and provide you with a report of their workstations, giving you the means to assist with any injury prevention needs they may have, and providing records that you are meeting your requirements.

Objectives

Learners should have a good understanding of hazards in the office and how to control them

Learners will be able to undertake an ergonomic checklist

Employers should have evidence of workstations that are ergonomically set up for their employees
